RETHINKING MIGRATION: AN APPROACH FROM CRITICAL BORDER THEORY

COURSE DESCRIPTION

In the course I will systematically relate border theory to migration theory. We start by exploring the border paradox: Borders are both arbitrarily drawn and can therefore always be challenged. At the same time they are at easily naturalized and essentialized. They are simultaneously extremely vulnerable and extremely persistent. I will ask what this paradox implies for the migratory experience for which border crossing and border management are central. I will also ask how immigrant societies conceptualize migration as a violation of borders and react to this by redrawing borders within the nation state and by reinforcing them (i.e. though securitization).

PLAGIARISM & ACADEMIC MISCONDUCT

It is expected that all homework assignments, projects, papers, theses, and examinations and any other work submitted for academic credit will be the student's own. Students should always take great care to distinguish their own ideas and knowledge from information derived from sources. The term "sources" includes not only primary and secondary material published in print or online, but also information and opinions gained directly from other people. Quotations must be placed properly within quotation marks and must be cited fully. In addition, all paraphrased material must be acknowledged completely. Whenever ideas or facts are derived from a student's reading and research or from a student's own writings, the sources must be indicated. It is the expectation of every course that all work submitted for a course or for any other academic purpose will have been done solely for that course or for that purpose.¹

Students who violate University rules on scholastic dishonesty are subject to disciplinary penalties, including failure in the course and be remanded to the appropriate authorities of their home university for disciplinary action. This might lead up to a dismissal from the University.

^{*}Deadline for essays to be turned in is July 20, 2016.
